Excerpt: . chapter vi. on trouting with the fly. Having in the preceding chapters expressed our opinion, that fly-fishing should be practised up stream, and having mentioned the flies and tackle most suitable for the purpose, we now request the reader's particular attention to the remainder of the subject, as being the most important part of it. The first point which falls under consideration, is the casting of the line. After having put up your rod, drawn off a sufficient quantity of line from your reel and fastened on your flies; before commencing, soak the line and flies in the water for a few minutes, as it is no use fishing when the gut is dry, and lying in rebellious curls upon the surface; and when, should a trout take any of the flies, there is a great risk of its carrying them all away; dry gut being very brittle and apt to break at the knots. When the line is thoroughly soaked, casting of the line. 101 take the rod in your right hand, raise it with sufficient force to make the line go to its full length behind, and then pausing for a moment till it has done so, with a circular motion of the wrist and arm urge the rod forward, rapidly at first, but gradually lessening the speed, so that when it stops, no recoil of the point will take place. The whole motion of the rod in casting should be in the shape of a...
