Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The Little Wings: Poems and Essays Matthew Arnold was a fine critic, but, like many modern critics, he sometimes allowed the dislike of mysticism to lead him merely into mystification. And he never said a sillier thing, I may respectfully remark, than when he said that Wordsworth was fanciful in recalling the love of Nature in childhood, because a man's best appreciation of Nature comes when he is about thirty. This may be true of him considered as a landscape painter or a landscape gardener, but Wordsworth was thinking of something much deeper and more divine than any such technical judgments. It was something expressed even better than by Wordsworth, I think, in a very marvellous poem by Traherne about the white light shining on all things in infancy. If we are to have the records of childhood it is well that this, which is the best of childhood, should be recorded; and there are a few who, passing from childhood to youth, are able to record it.
