Excerpt: .each of the other schools, and have been selected in the same manner. All the questions to be asked have been chosen by the medical council in Paris, from the number sent from all the schools. These questions, in a sealed envelope, with each question also sealed, and those for the different grades separated, are sent to the board of examiners after they have met in session. The candidate to be first examined is determined by lot, as well as the question to be first asked. All other candidates then withdraw, and are placed under guard in a distant room. As soon as the question is answered, the same question is put to each of the others, the order being determined by lot. Thus a separate question is drawn at each day s session. As a candidate answers, each professor places after the name...
